

NeurONE, Digital painting, 2011

Art, truth and politics.
A statement of an artist.

We live in a causal world, and we all play our part in this reality. This is what I ended up doing in it. Our observations determine our actions, and our actions affect the observations of others. Understanding "the big picture" is my journey, and I believe that process, plowing through the labor to finish a piece, is recorded there for others to discover. That who seeks shall find.

I create art with a broad spectrum of mediums. I love to mix disciplines like animation, performance, sculpture and electronics. By reusing tools and resources, I respect the principles of sustainability and intelligent resource management. The abundance of methods available to the artist today, can give enormous freedom to the creative soul. By giving shape, rhythm and form to something vague and undefined, I usually discover concepts with much meaning to me. Proceeding with great determination, without a fixed destination is always, a leap of faith.

This journey has been emotionally hard, as I've come to realize many things, that need repairing. I do what I do because I have a need to understand myself and this world, and I love to learn new techniques and tools on the way.

And where is the politics? That is when people work together to achieve a common goal. We all do it, knowingly or not.